Abstract

Olive Cocker Clark (née Brewster), Veterans Remember, VR2-V-D-2007-045

Biographical Information Overview of Interview: Olive Cocker Clark, née Brewster, was born on July 27, 1920 in Passaic, New Jersey. After marrying George Cocker in 1942, she moved to Childers, Texas where George was stationed. She remembers the town being very small, muddy, and even having wooden sidewalks. In Texas, George, a private, taught Norden bombsight and automatic pilot lessons to lieutenants for flying. Clark acquired a job, while in Texas, as the secretary to the City Manager. Even with their combined incomes, the couple lived meagerly and struggled to make ends meet.

Clark was sad when she had to leave Childers, Texas for Langley Field, Virginia when George was once again transferred. While in Langley Field, Virginia, Clark worked for the United Service Organization (USO), which eventually became the CIA. There, she made sandwiches and served soldiers; at night, the USO would hold dances for the soldiers, which Clark regularly attended. Eventually, after taking the civil service exam, Clark began working as a secretary for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. Meanwhile, George was transferred overseas to Guam and Saipan, where he helped to repair airplanes. Realizing she was pregnant, Clark left her job in Virginia and returned home; she gave birth to a daughter named Susan. In retrospect, Clark felt times were difficult but she was never uncomfortable being a wife during the World War II era.
