Abstract

David Blanchette, IHPA Legacy, HP-A-L-2015-023

Biographical Information Overview of Interview: Dave Blanchette was born on January 23, 1960 in Kankakee, Illinois and subsequently moved with his family to Jacksonville, Illinois in 1972, where he lived at the time of the interview. He earned a BA in Journalism at MacMurray College in Jacksonville, Illinois in 1982. Thereafter, Dave found work as the Radio News Director and Reporter at WJIL-WJVO Radio in Jacksonville from May 1979 through November 1987. In 1987 Blanchette began work as the Public Information Officer (PIO) for the Illinois Department of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities, and in 1989 he moved to the Illinois Historic Preservation Agency (IHPA), serving as agency PIO.

For the next two and a half decades, Blanchette represented the agency to the general public, helping publicize and/or react to issues at the state's many historic sites, including the Dana Thomas House, the Old State Capitol, the Pullman Historic Site and scores of others. Among his most challenging moments were the flood of 1993 at Fort De Chartres, and a fire that burned down administration buildings at the Pullman Historic Site in 1998. By that time, much of Blanchette's time was spent on the agency's efforts to create a new facility to house the Illinois State Historical Library's extensive Lincoln collection. That effort eventually led to the creation of the Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum. David discusses that process in great detail, providing insight into how something so ambitious came about. He talked about the crucial role that Julie Cellini, as the chair of the IHPA Board of Trustees, played in creating ALPLM. He also addressed the key role played by State Historian Tom Schwartz and IHPA Director Susan Mogerman, as well as the creativity and energy of Bob Rogers, whose company, BRC Imagination Arts, designed the museum's world-class exhibits. He fondly remembers the exhilaration of opening day on April 19, 2005. David concludes the interview with a discussion about his decision to take a position in Governor Pat Quinn's administration in 2013.
